the first. The Torah is teaching us the Kachos and abilities that we all possess; that with a bit of effort it’s possible to create an “anti-Ga’ava’ mindset!” One can accomplish this by training oneself to attribute any honor received to factors other than his own greatness. Here, the Medrash says that Nachshon sacrificed first because his Shevet was at the front when they traveled. Nachshon only needed to accomplish this by training himself to attribute any honor received to factors other than his own greatness; rather than his greatness itself. This lesson can applied in many areas of life. Often when something seems difficult, what we need to do is to focus on creating a certain mindset for ourselves and then we can accomplish “impossible.” -R’ Nachman in his honor? However, he successfully created the “anti-Ga’ava’ mindset” which allowed him to “convince” himself otherwise.
