Yakov’s Dual Role in Building Klal Yisrael

Revised and Expanded from BYSO Archives

This week’s Parsha is a most difficult one to understand. It seems that Eisav did such a good job pretending to be a Yidik that Yitzchak thought so. Can it really be that Yitzchak was fooled by Eisav? How is it possible to believe that one of the Avois Hakedoshim couldn’t see through Eisav’s façade? The questions spill over into next week’s Parsha, too.

The Totsah tells us that Leah’s eyes were soft (from crying), and Rashi explains that the Havdala of Eisav that the Hakedoshim couldn’t see through Eisav’s façade? The questions spill over into next week’s Parsha, too.

This week’s Parsha is a most difficult one to understand. It seems that Eisav did such a good job pretending to be a Yidik that Yitzchak thought so. Can it really be that Yitzchak was fooled by Eisav? How is it possible to believe that one of the Avois Hakedoshim couldn’t see through Eisav’s façade? The questions spill over into next week’s Parsha, too.

The Totsah tells us that Leah’s eyes were soft (from crying), and Rashi explains that the Havdala of Eisav that the Hakedoshim couldn’t see through Eisav’s façade? The questions spill over into next week’s Parsha, too.

This week’s Parsha is a most difficult one to understand. It seems that Eisav did such a good job pretending to be a Yidik that Yitzchak thought so. Can it really be that Yitzchak was fooled by Eisav? How is it possible to believe that one of the Avois Hakedoshim couldn’t see through Eisav’s façade? The questions spill over into next week’s Parsha, too.

The Totsah tells us that Leah’s eyes were soft (from crying), and Rashi explains that the Havdala of Eisav that the Hakedoshim couldn’t see through Eisav’s façade? The questions spill over into next week’s Parsha, too.

This week’s Parsha is a most difficult one to understand. It seems that Eisav did such a good job pretending to be a Yidik that Yitzchak thought so. Can it really be that Yitzchak was fooled by Eisav? How is it possible to believe that one of the Avois Hakedoshim couldn’t see through Eisav’s façade? The questions spill over into next week’s Parsha, too.
In the early 20th century, a Jew named Franz Kehilla was born. He was the son of a rich and influential family. The Kehilla was a place where people could come together to listen to the teachings of great rabbis and scholars. Franz grew up in a world where one's worth was determined by one's status and position in society.

The Kehilla was more than just a place of worship. It was a community where people could come together to support each other. Franz was grateful for the wonderful members of this Kehilla. While we do feel the void of the relatives who have passed away, we feel very grateful that we do have our other family to celebrate with, and that is our Kehilla.

Franz's family was very wealthy, and he was able to attend the best schools. He was also very good at sports, which was expected of young men of his status. He was very popular among his peers, and he felt that he was always the center of attention.

However, Franz was not satisfied with his life. He wanted to do more, to make a difference in the world. He started to feel that his life was not meaningful, that he was not making a real difference. He began to question the values of his society, and he started to think about what he really wanted to do with his life.

One day, Franz met a group of people who were involved in the Yishuv. They were a group of young Jews who were working to build a new Jewish state in Eretz Yisrael. Franz was very impressed by their dedication and their commitment to the cause.

Franz decided to join the Yishuv. He left his comfortable life in Europe and went to Eretz Yisrael. He lived in a small village, and he worked as a volunteer teacher. He was very happy to be doing something meaningful with his life.

Franz's life changed in a very special way. He met a young Jewish girl named Rachel. Rachel was from a poor family, and she was not expected to do much with her life. However, Rachel had a deep faith in God and a strong determination to do good.

Franz and Rachel fell in love. They got married, and they moved to a small village where they could live a simple life and work hard for the community. They had many children, and they were very happy.

Franz and Rachel were very involved in the building of the new Jewish state. They worked hard to make sure that everyone had a place in the community, and they were very committed to the values of the Yishuv.

Franz and Rachel lived a simple life, but they were very happy. They felt that they were making a real difference in the world, and they were very proud of their children and grandchildren.

In the end, Franz and Rachel lived a long and happy life. They were very proud of their children and grandchildren, and they knew that they had done good work in building the new Jewish state.